Empowering your teen to game safely

Earn your game

Play is an important way for young people to relax and socialize- but it can still be guided by your expectations. As they get older, giving your teen some input into these expectations can help them feel listened to, and provides you with the chance to explain why you're making the decisions.

Not all games are created equal, so before you automatically say yes (or no) to something your teen wants to use, check out the following things.

Completing this with your child is a great way for you to both discuss your reasons.

What's the purpose of the game?

What is the classification?

How do you communicate with other players?

How do you keep yourself anonymous?

What are the steps to block or report something?

Do you have to spend real money to progress?

If yes, where will this money come from?

When will you fit this into your day?
